Haifeng Imperial Dinner

Centuries ago the Mongols ruled ancient China. They enjoyed hearty fare and, especially, tableside cooking. One of the most exotic cooking vessels is the Oriental or Mongolian Fire Pot. Presented tableside, raw food is cooked in a center pot from which a chimney rises from the heat source below. Once the raw food is cooked in the steaming chicken broth, it is served as a soup.

Cold Lamb Haifeng
Sliced lamb, chilled in soy aspic, served with a Chinese vegetable garnish

Mongolian Fire Pot
Prepared tableside with chicken, beef, pork, scallops, shrimp, oysters and assorted Chinese vegetables

Imperial Peking Duck
Our Peking Duck is slowly roasted until the thick skin becomes crisp and golden. It is then sliced thin and served with Mandarin pancakes and traditional accompaniments. (The skin is considered to be the choicest part.)

Shanghai Chow Yok
Butterflied tenderloin of beef with a sauce made from a secret recipe brought over from Shanghai

Pineapple Fried Rice

Your Choice of Desserts and Teas

The Dragon's Banquet

In Chinese menu planning, any dinner composed of just five spicy dishes or five sweet dishes is ill-conceived. The rule is one of vigorous contrast. In our selection for the composed dinners, we have made every attempt to follow this philosophy.

Royal Clams
Little neck clams cooked on the half shell and served with black bean sauce

Winter Melon Soup
A delightful blend of fresh winter melon, ham, scallops, pork, chicken and other delicacies

Yangtze River Chicken
Hot and spicy, served with garlic and peppers

Peking Shrimp
Sautéed with Chinese vegetables and served in a bird's nest
